EN III

The Dusseldorf Weekly Temer for November 14, 1957 includes these two paragraphs.

"Die Deutsche Zukunft, political weekly paper run by FDP Bundestag Deputy Siegfried ZOGELMANN, directed sharp nationalistic attacks against Professor A. J. P. TAYLOR of Oxford University. An unsigned editorial dealt with Taylor's recent statements on German reunification in the London Sunday Express which it considered proof of Britain's desire to see Germany's division continued. It said: 'Now we can read it in black on white: Not against the emperor in 1914 nor against Hitler in 1933 did one go to war but because there are 'too many Germans'.' Professor Taylor was mistaken if he thought that Germans did not really desire reunification. They would wake up 'in spite of Bonn's policy of spreading sleepiness' (Einschlafepolitik).

The paper also used recent investigations of the personal records of a number of NRW criminal police officers, sponsored by the SPD, for attacks on the Berlin Document Center. It applauded NRW Minister of Interior Robert BIERNAT (SPD) for having disclosed that the investigations had been inspired by the Public Service and Transport Workers' Union (OTV) and for having rehabilitated the persons attacked. Deutsche Zukunft concluded that it had not been concern for democracy but personal ambitions which had initiated such action. Such "smelling out of Nazis" (with the aid of the Document Center) should be officially terminated in NRW as it has been terminated in other Laender of the Federal Republic."

We also have the following in Berlin's despatch 195 on the BDC records of new members of the Bundestag.
